

My initial reference monitor did not account for any errors such as negative offset, writing beyond the EOF and checking if the file was closed before writing to it. These were all addressed in the second reference monitor. I think a more major issue that my initial reference monitor did not address was the handling of race conditions. To handle this, I added a lock attribute to the LPFile class, which utilized the `createlock()` function.